Endosyms have hidden among the human race since the beginning of time. The idea of a human possessed by a demon crosses all religions. But with endosyms, possession is not the case—the endosym is actually the assimilation of a demon and human into one body, with the DNA of both creatures intermixed.

Endosyms are stronger and smarter than either of the two individual creatures. The outward appearance of an endosym is similar to a normal human. And, only a few humans out of the 7 billion that inhabit the planet have the ability to see the demon within the man.

The transformation of the demon and human into an endosym is a traumatic event. For the endosym to survive, it must live off the essence of normal humans as they die and release an electrical impulse when their brain dies. Because of this need, the endosym may go on a killing spree and usually is apprehended or killed by the authorities before it can either gain strength or become hidden.

In recorded history only several hundred endosyms have come into existence. At least until now.

Although most of us know nothing about endosyms, they are found in the written history of mankind. They have many names and all religions hint of demons and possession by malevolent spirits. Drawings of men with horns and a tail are found in caves from Stone Age times. Bronze statues from 7,000 years ago depict humans with horns. Today in West Africa there are stories of man/demons that hide in the bush. Masks and statues depict these strange creatures.

Although most endosyms are short lived, some have survived even until today. As they continue to feed off human essence, they can live for thousands of years. The folklore of vampires and werewolves are the stories of the endosyms. Perhaps even some of history's most ruthless villains were endosyms. Names such as Stalin, Hitler, Idi Amin come to mind.

In early times the endosym was believed to be a normal human, with an unclean spirit residing in that person's body. Today, there is a more logical answer: the demon and the human are both real beings. It is the demon that enters the human body. It may be that the demon is not, in fact a solid substance on earth. It comes from another dimension or alternate universe and once it passes through a portal it is invisible to the naked eye. When it encounters a human, it enters the human body like a parasite or germ. The two become one through a process called endosymbiosis.

As defined by CreationWiki, the encyclopedia of creation science (see <http://creationwiki.org/Endosymbiosis>) "Endosymbiosis is a form of symbiotic relationship wherein an organism lives in the body or cell of another. The invasive organisms, which are known as endosymbionts, may either occupy the intracellular space or live extracellularly within a host organism. The relationship is usually mutually beneficial, and in some cases obligate, meaning that neither are able to live without the other."

So, when the demon and human become one through endosymbiosis, such a creature becomes the endosym of the series.

Of course if we accept this theory, obviously—at least in the past—the movement from the demon world to earth happened rarely, and only a few demons passed through the portal. But, why? The answer is wormholes in the space-time continuum. What if the opening occurred for only a short time? Then as long as there was only a handful of endosyms on earth no one knew of their existence.

But what would happen if an endosym found a way to keep the portal open, allowing a steady stream of demons to cross over to earth, merge with humans and become endosyms? And what if the endosyms, who look like normal humans to us, infiltrated key positions around the earth in all countries with a goal of enslaving and feeding off the billions of humans on earth. Then we would have a major problem—and who could stop such an invasion?

So begins the Endosym book series.
